

Thanksgiving is just around the corner, and this year we are thankful for our wonderful school and library customers AND for the slew of new titles that are being released this month. Your patrons will be delighted to see a new crop of titles on your shelves, just in time for the holiday season.

You'll be hearing a lot about the Kinect in the next few months. This is Microsoft's hands-free controller that is used in conjunction with the Xbox 360. Users will be able to move their bodies and wave their arms to control the game play. The wireless sensor tracks players' full-body movements, voices, and faces. As titles are released using this new technology, we'll indicate this feature in the product description. If you want a list of the Kinect titles, please email me directly and I'll tell you what's coming out and when.

The Nintendo Wii also has a new bit of technology for you: the UDraw. The UDraw tablet interfaces with some Wii games to bring art to a whole new level. Look for games that include the UDraw technology in the product description.

We are looking forward to a very busy holiday season, getting titles into your libraries as quickly as possible. Please call, fax, or email if you need a processing sample or additional information on title availability.

Happy Thanksgiving from all of us at Thomas Klise/Crimson Multimedia!
